Presented by: Dr. Kimberly Eaton and Ali Washabaugh

Research shows employment is the number one issue impacting individuals being released from jail and prison. At the same time there is a need in many area businesses for skilled labor. The solution to these employment problems may be found at the intersection where those with criminal backgrounds meet the needs of industries seeking workers.

Presentation and Q&A

SYNOPSIS: A change in thinking is required to give those with something to offer a chance to overcome a past that continues to impact their lives long after their debt to society has been paid in full. The time is here for innovated thinkers to join forces and solve this dilemma. Employers need to better understand the risks and needs of the offender population. The criminal justice system must be willing to educate employers and provide a forum where employer concerns are addressed. Training and communication will enhance the relationship between the two systems and lead to a community that is better equipped to use the available laborers to its full advantage.

This workshop is designed to enhance understanding by outlining the principles of criminogenic risks and needs while providing a real-life story to illustrate how someone can be involved in the criminal justice system and find a way back to be a contributing working member of society. Our community is better when we work together for the good of all.

Please be sure to register to reserve your seat. Parking is available on-site at the Coyle Free Library. Overflow parking is across the street at King Street Church. Anyone in HR or management is strongly encouraged to attend.
